

Colorado based location photographer Keith “Chet” Clerihue captures the sweeping and intimate agrarian landscapes of the west and its inhabitants. He develops black-and-white and color images that are evocative and emotive yet quiet and authentic tapping into his insider’s grasp of rural life and his art history education.

With a natural sense of composition, a thoughtful application of light and a strong connection to his subject, Chet creates images that are honest and passionate. He is committed to creating images that imply a strong sense of place and that convey a universal story. A fourth generation Coloradoan, Chet is the husband to his beautiful wife Lori and father to their one incredible two-year old son Kip.
